

Somalia Humanitarian Fund: 2017 Dashboard

As of 5 March 2018

Famine has been averted in Somalia in 2017, thanks to the rapid mobilization of resources and scaled-up response, but the extended drought has severely aggravated the crisis. By the end of 2017, 5.4 million Somalis were still in need of humanitarian assistance, of which 2.7 million people faced crisis and emergency. The risk of famine persists in 2018 if emergency relief efforts are not sustained.

Somalia Humanitarian Fund (SHF) provided critical support to the most urgent humanitarian needs, prioritizing direct implementation, integrated response and working, when and where possible, with national partners (39 per cent of funds).

The 1st Standard Allocation in ($25.4 million) supported early scale up of famine prevention response and was closely aligned with $33 million in grants from the Central Emergency Response Fund (CERF). Coordinated allocations prioritized immediate needs in worst-affected areas, with SHF funding used to rapidly boost NGO operations and CERF funds used to cover procurement of life-saving supplies in bulk through UN agencies.

Another $18.6 million was allocated by the SHF to support integrated programming through two integrated response rounds (Bay and Bandir; Lower Shabelle, Galmudug and Togdheer); for enabling programmes and for measles vaccination.

As 2017 was closing, the SHF injected $12 million through the 2nd Standard Allocation for integrated response at priority hotspots (Galgaduud, Banadir, Bay, Lower Shabelle and Mudug); and to address cluster-specific priority needs in select areas, providing critical funding for sustaining response early in 2018.
